TGIM WEEKLY AUDIO: How You Do Anything is How You Do Everything

Transcription*

*Thank God It's Monday!*TM The formula for getting others to like you is quite simple. First of all, use the person's name. Dale Carnegie says that the sweetest name in the English language is a person's name.

As you get to know each other, ask questions about their lives and genuinely care about their answers. And if you don't inherently care, learn to care. Others can sense superficiality, and so decide to become genuine.

As discussion goes on, spend time speaking about topics that coincide with their interests. It's really that simple. The more questions you ask of others, the more you make them feel like they matter to you. Before you know it, nobody will be able to resist liking you!

Have a great Monday!
